

One design principle I found most useful was contrast because it made the important information stand out more and easier to notice. The easiest part of Canva for me was using the templates and changing colors and fonts since everything was pretty straightforward. The hardest part was figuring out the layout without making it look too crowded. I learned that visual communication works best when the design is simple and clear. Overall, I realized that less is more when it comes to making designs easy to understand.